Dear Richard,

I am writing to respond to IPSA's consultation on how MPs' pay should be updated and express my disappointment with the recent review.

The decision to increase MPs' pay is simply wrong. At a time of crisis, when people are losing their jobs and many others are facing pay cuts or freezes, it is completely inappropriate to raise MPs' pay by £3,000.

This mistake has been recognised by the Government as demonstrated in its decision to freeze ministerial salaries for another year. IPSA should follow this example, proving that the interests of politicians are not being put ahead of taxpayers.

I would strongly urge you to reconsider this decision and look again at the issue. Proceeding with this pay increase will only erode trust between the public and their representatives during an acute national crisis.

Should you have any questions or wish to discuss this further, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Yours ~~sincerely~~,

Robert Largan MP
