Choosing and caring for a Christmas tree is a beloved tradition that adds warmth and festivity to homes during the holiday season. In Louisiana, the rich variety of homegrown Christmas trees offers residents the opportunity to select the perfect centerpiece for their celebrations. Our state is home to many choose-and-cut farms, where families can pick from a diverse selection of tree species, including Leyland cypress, Arizona cypress, Virginia pine, and Eastern redcedar.

Selecting Your Christmas Tree

When visiting a tree farm, it's essential to consider the characteristics of each tree species. The Leyland cypress, a favorite in Louisiana, is known for its longevity after cutting and its narrow crown, characterized by medium to dark green foliage. It's perfect for those who want their tree to last well into the New Year. However, its branches are limber, which may require careful placement of ornaments.

Murray cypress is a variety of the Leyland cypress. This tree drops very few needles and, with proper care, will easily stay fresh throughout the entire Christmas season. In addition to being a beautiful tree with soft foliage and a lemon mint aroma, it does not produce pollen.

The Arizona cypress offers a distinctive pyramid shape, with dense, blue-green foliage and a pleasant citrus scent. Although it may not last as long as the Leyland cypress, it remains fresh through the holiday season with proper watering.

Carolina Sapphire and Blue Ice are varieties of the Arizona cypress and two of the newest species developed for Christmas trees. Their foliage is blue-green in color, soft to the touch, and very dense with an outstanding aroma. Due to their tendency to dry out even in water stands, it is recommended to cut these three to four weeks before Christmas.

Virginia pine is another excellent choice, especially for those who love hanging heavy ornaments. Its sturdy branches and shorter needles make it a versatile option, while genetic improvements have enhanced its suitability for Louisiana's climate.

The Eastern redcedar, a traditional choice for many southern families, offers a dense, pyramidal shape with dark green foliage and reddish-brown bark. Proper maintenance can ensure a straight trunk and dense growth.

Tips for Selecting the Right Tree

Before heading to a farm or lot, measure the space where the tree will be displayed to avoid purchasing a tree that's too large. Consider the type of decorations you plan to use, as some species have more open foliage or sturdier branches.

When choosing a tree, conduct a freshness test by running a branch through your hand; the needles should remain intact and not fall off. Check for indicators of dryness, such as excessive needle loss or discolored foliage. If in doubt, select another tree.

Caring for Your Christmas Tree

Once you've selected your tree, proper care is crucial for maintaining its freshness. Be sure to use plenty of water, as more than half of a cut tree's weight comes from water. Using a traditional reservoir-type stand to display your tree in water is the most effective way to keep it fresh and minimize needle loss. When displaying the tree indoors, select a stand with a water-holding capacity suitable for the tree's size; typically, the stand should hold one quart of water for every inch of stem diameter. Devices are available to help maintain a constant water level in the stand. Ensure the stand fits the tree without having to whittle down the trunk, as the outer wood layers are essential for water uptake.

Before placing the tree in the stand, make a fresh cut to remove about a half-inch thick disk from the base of the trunk, cutting perpendicular to the stem axis. Avoid cutting the trunk at an angle or in a V-shape, as this complicates securing the tree and reduces the available water supply. Drilling a hole in the trunk's base does not enhance water absorption. Once home, place the tree in water as soon as possible; most species can

Louisiana Produce Safety State Certification Program

Are you a small or mid-sized farmer? Does your business purchase produce from local farmers? Your input is needed!

The Louisiana Department of Agriculture and Forestry's Produce Safety Program is conducting a survey to better serve our hard-working farmers and buyers. Working together we will be able to build a voluntary, free certification program that will focus on small and mid-sized farms providing opportunities for food safety, education and verification.

This voluntary program, with no cost to the grower, will build upon the established Produce Safety Program, and Louisiana Fruit and Vegetable Program (Good Agricultural Practices, GAP). It will benefit buyers and emerging farmers and help prepare farmers for potential regulatory requirements or third-party audits necessary for business expansion.

Funded Initiatives will include:

- On farm assessments.
- Consultations to develop food safety systems.
- Access to crucial resources and funding.
- Documented certifications will provide buyers with an efficient food safety practice verification method ensuring they are buying food from farms who put food safety at the forefront.

If you are interested in this program please take this survey, <https://form.jotform.com/252165541452049>.

YOUR INPUT IS NEEDED

Are you a small or mid-sized farmer? Does your business purchase produce from local farms?

The Louisiana Department of Agriculture and Forestry's Produce Safety Program is conducting a survey to better serve our hard working farmers and buyers. Working together we will be able to build a voluntary, free certification program that will focus on small and mid-sized farms providing opportunities for food safety, education and verification.

Scan QR Code to take survey!

Of 400 Louisiana Produce Farms:

- 27 out of 400 farms are inspected under PSR/GAP Audits.
- 293 out of 400 farms grow higher risk produce without food safety support or verification. (produce that ready to eat)
- 24 out of 400 farms grow lower risk produce without food safety support or verification. (rarely consumed raw produce)

Termite training program helps fill crucial need in south Louisiana

When Qian “Karen” Sun first moved to Baton Rouge, the entomologist was able to experience something she had never seen in her life: a swarm of Formosan subterranean termites.

The event, which happens around Mother’s Day yearly and can include millions of alates, shows the scale that termites can reproduce and destroy.

This regional problem is why the LSU AgCenter has operated the Lois Caffey Termite Training Program for more than 30 years.

“There is a need. I know a lot of people need to take the training. And they need to take the training to take the licensing exam,” Sun said. “Companies want to send their new employees to this program so they can learn.”

The program, now led and organized by Sun, is offered in October with two classes. The basic class is aimed at exterminators who have been working for no more than a year with termites, and the master class is designed for those with a year or more of experience. Each class is taught twice annually: in the spring and the fall.

The classes are taught at the Lois Caffey Termite Training Facility, which is located south of the LSU campus at the AgCenter Doyle Chambers Central Research Station. The program is a joint effort of the AgCenter, the Louisiana Department of Agriculture and Forestry and the Louisiana Pest Management Association.

In the basic class, students are taught the biology of termites, minimum requirements for treating termites and basic procedures on how to use different techniques to safely apply termiticide. Sun is joined by Aaron Ashbrook, an entomology professor at the AgCenter, as well as Tyrone Dudley and Milton Schleismann, both former LDAF employees, to teach the classes.

The classes are taught both in a classroom and outside at the termite training facility, where the hands-on demonstrations are done. To be a part of the class, students are sent to the program from their employers. There are usually 15 students in the basic classes and about 30 in the master class each time.

The master classes are a more in-depth look at termite behaviors and techniques to manage them.

After the completion of the master class and following a passing grade on the exit exam, participants are presented with a certificate that is recognized as an important achievement for exterminators. This certificate is only one of three in the state that is officially recognized by the LDAF Structural Pest Control Commission, which is a requirement for termite control license application.

“The certificate shows the students have attended this class and they also passed the test, and their employer will know the results, and that’s something that would motivate the participants to learn and pay attention to the lectures,” Sun said. “We try our best to help them learn and pass the test, in particular for the master program because a lot of participants are going to take their licensing exam, and it has to be after this.”

In Louisiana, there are nine species of termites. The most common and most destructive are the non-native Formosan subterranean termites, which experts believe came to Louisiana on battleships that were stationed in the Pacific Ocean following the end of World War II, Sun said.

Termites have been the focus of government-funded programs in New Orleans, as they decimated old wooden building structures. With problems persisting in New Orleans and other parts of south Louisiana, it is important for up-and-coming exterminators like Kelvin Johnson, an exterminator in the basic training class, to learn background information along with practical skills.

“I’m doing this for the knowledge and a license, and so if I ever decide to move somewhere else, I’ll have this under my belt, and I can use it in my own house as well too,” Johnson said.

1. Sauté seafood in olive oil in a medium pot on medium/high until fully cooked. Season with salt and pepper to taste.
2. Once fully cooked, drain the liquid reserving only 1 tablespoon to add to sauce later. If necessary, chop seafood into spoon size pieces.
3. In a blender, pour 1 jar of Ippolito's Naturally Italian Spicy Tomato Sauce. Blend until smooth. About 30 seconds to 1 minute.
4. Pour blended sauce into the same medium size pot. On medium-high heat, stir until sauce comes to a very low boil.
5. Add cooked seafood of choice along with the 1 tablespoon of reserved liquid from the sautéed seafood.
6. Stir in whipping cream until blended evenly. Reduce heat to low/medium and continue stirring for 2-3 minutes until heated through. (Do not boil or overcook the cream)
7. Ladle bisque into 4 bowls and garnish each with a fresh basil leaf. Serve with a slice of garlic or Italian bread.

Christmas Trees

go 6 to 8 hours after cutting and still absorb water. Avoid bruising or dirtying the cut surface and temporarily store the tree in a cool location if necessary, keeping the cut trunk in a water-filled bucket.

The water temperature for the stand does not affect water uptake, but check the stand daily to ensure the water level remains above the tree base. Keep the tree away from heat sources, such as fireplaces, heaters, and direct sunlight, as lowering the room temperature will slow down the drying process and reduce daily water consumption. Use low-heat lights, such as miniature lights, to minimize tree drying. Always inspect light sets before use, and replace worn ones. Avoid overloading electrical circuits and turn off tree lights when leaving the house or going to bed. Monitor the tree for freshness, and if it becomes very dry, remove it from the house.

Recycling and Living Trees

After the holidays, consider recycling your tree at a local program. If you've chosen a tree with roots, such as a potted or burlap-wrapped tree, ensure it's stored in a cool, sheltered area and watered appropriately. When replanting, follow recommended guidelines to ensure the tree's survival and growth.

Christmas tree farms are often family-owned and operated, and they pride themselves on growing their trees with care and consideration for the environment. According to the National Christmas Tree Association, for every tree purchased, farmers plant 1-3 seedlings in its place. So, not only will you bring home a beautiful, fresh tree, but you'll also be contributing to a cycle of planting and harvesting that maintains green spaces and provides habitats for wildlife.

Most Louisiana Christmas tree farms open the day after Thanksgiving and sell quickly, so make your plans now. Check out our list of local tree farms.>>>>>

NESWCD Crafting for Conservation

The Northeast Soil and Water Conservation District (NESWCD) is hosting a new series of outreach events: Crafting for Conservation. Children of all ages are welcome to join us monthly for a craft accompanied by a lesson in conservation.

In September, NESWCD jump started the series with a lesson on native birds while making pinecone bird feeders. In October, we painted pumpkins while learning about the pumpkin lifecycle and its benefit to the soil. Future crafts will include eco-friendly turkeys, pinecone Christmas trees, and popsicle stick snowflakes.

We hope that "Crafting for Conservation" will continue to grow and educate the next generation of conservationists! Follow Northeast Soil & Water Conservation District on Facebook to keep up with future events or contact Katie Taylor at northeastswcd@yahoo.com with any questions.

Winter Weather Tips for Pet and Livestock Owners

As temperatures drop, the LSU School of Veterinary Medicine reminds pet and livestock owners to take extra precautions to keep animals safe and healthy during the coldest months of the year. Cold weather can worsen medical conditions such as arthritis, and animals—like people—have different tolerances for low temperatures. LSU Vet Med veterinarians encourage owners to schedule preventive care exams to ensure pets and livestock are ready for winter.

Tips for pet owners

Know the Limits

Cold tolerance varies by breed, coat thickness, body fat, age, and health. Short-haired, small, elderly, or arthritic pets are more vulnerable to cold and ice. Pets with diabetes, heart disease, kidney disease, or hormonal imbalances (such as Cushing's disease) may have a harder time regulating their body temperature and may be more susceptible to problems from temperature extremes. The same goes for very young and very old pets. If you need help determining your pet's temperature limits, consult your veterinarian.

Stay Inside

Cats and dogs should be kept inside during cold weather. It's a common belief that dogs and cats are more resistant than people to cold weather because of their fur, but it's untrue. Like people, cats and dogs are susceptible to frostbite and hypothermia and generally should be kept inside. Longer-haired and thick-coated dog breeds, such as huskies and other dogs bred for colder climates, are more tolerant of cold weather; but no pet should be left outside for long periods in below-freezing weather.

Make Some Noise

Before starting your car, bang on the hood and honk the horn to scare away outdoor or feral cats that may be sheltering near warm engines.

Check the Paws

Check your dog's paws frequently for signs of cold-weather injury or damage, such as cracked or bleeding paw pads. During a walk, sudden lameness may be due to an injury or may be due to ice accumulation between his/her toes.

Dress for the Weather

Short-haired pets benefit from sweaters or coats. Always use a dry garment when heading outside. Some pet owners also use booties to protect their dog's feet; if you choose to use them, make sure they fit properly.

Keep Pets Identified

Snow and ice can hide familiar scents, making it easier for pets to get lost. Ensure collars and microchip information are up to date.

Avoid Cold Cars

Just as hot cars are dangerous in summer, cold cars can be deadly in winter. Limit travel and never leave pets unattended in a vehicle.

Prevent Poisoning

Clean up antifreeze spills immediately; even a small amount can be fatal. Use pet-safe de-icers whenever possible.

Protect Family

Odds are your pet will be spending more time inside during the winter, so it's a good time to make sure your house is properly pet-proofed. Use space heaters with caution around pets because they can cause burns or they can be knocked over, potentially starting a fire. Install carbon monoxide detectors to keep your entire family safe from harm. If you have a pet bird, make sure its cage is away from drafts.

Provide Shelter

If pets must stay outside, supply a sturdy, insulated shelter raised off the ground with dry bedding and fresh, unfrozen water. Avoid heat lamps and space heaters due to fire and burn risks.

Recognize Problems

Watch for shivering, weakness, anxiety, or attempts to burrow—these may signal hypothermia. Contact a veterinarian immediately if you suspect hypothermia or frostbite.

Be Prepared

Keep an emergency kit with pet food, water, and medications for at least five days in case of power outages or severe weather.

Feed Appropriately

Outdoor pets may need more calories to maintain body heat, but consult your veterinarian to ensure proper nutrition without overfeeding.

Tips for Livestock Owners

Schedule Veterinary Care Early

Address health concerns, vaccinations, and deworming before harsh conditions arrive. Animals that are pregnant, very young, or elderly may need special attention.

Provide Shelter

Livestock can tolerate cold but need protection from wind, rain, and snow. Structural shelters with ventilation and dry bedding are best. Check blankets regularly for irritation or injury.

Ensure Water Access

Keep water sources from freezing with heated buckets or tank heaters. Livestock will drink less if water is too cold, increasing health risks.

Manage Feed

Increase feed quality or quantity to help animals generate heat, and minimize ice or mud buildup to prevent slips and ensure veterinarian access.

Generations of Service Through Agriculture Advocacy

For the Sebren family of Louisiana, agriculture education isn't just a career — it's a family tradition built on faith, hard work and service. Spanning more than three generations, the Sebens have dedicated their lives to advocating for agriculture and shaping future leaders through FFA.

Although he was never an FFA member, Donny Sebren spent much of his life teaching. He worked several jobs throughout the years, but the classroom was where he truly belonged. Donny taught until he was more than 80 years old, leaving behind a legacy of dedication that inspired his son, Wesley, to follow in his footsteps.

Wesley's journey into agricultural education began in high school, under the guidance of his agriculture teacher, Chris Loupe, who encouraged him to get involved in FFA. Wesley showed livestock, competed with a meats evaluation team that won at the state level, and served on a parliamentary procedure team that placed at the state level. Those experiences — combined with his father's example — set the foundation for a lifelong passion for agricultural education.

After college, Wesley began his teaching career, and eventually found his home at West Ouachita High School, where he has taught for nearly two decades. When the school's agriculture program began, it had two teachers and around 275 students. Today, it serves more than 340 students with three teachers, and offers a wide range of courses and hands-on opportunities. Under Wesley's leadership, the West Ouachita FFA Chapter has consistently ranked among Louisiana's top programs, earning multiple state and national honors.

But for Wesley, the real reward has always been helping students discover their place in agriculture. “It starts in the classroom,” he says. “Most students don’t realize how much agriculture touches their everyday life, from food and clothing to housing. Once they understand that, they start to appreciate how vital this industry is.”

Growing up surrounded by that passion, Ashlee Sebren naturally gravitated toward FFA. She joined as a student at West Ouachita High School. At first, she wanted to make her dad proud, but quickly found her own reason to stay. Competing in competitions like employment skills and poultry, serving as an area and chapter officer and becoming a state FFA officer helped Ashlee discover her calling.

“During my state officer year, I met people from all over the country and learned so much about myself,” she says. “That’s when I knew agricultural education was where I belonged.”

Today, Ashlee teaches agriculture at Delhi Charter School, where she's already making her mark by producing three Area I officers this year. Like her father and grandfather before her, she's committed to giving students the same opportunities that shaped her. "By helping students see how agriculture connects to their lives," she says, "I can continue the legacy my family started."

Three generations later, the Sebrén family continues to live the FFA motto of “Learning to Do, Doing to Learn, Earning to Live, Living to Serve.”

Farm Bureau Welcomes Next Era Of Supporting Farmer Mental Wellbeing

The American Farm Bureau Federation is expanding the reach of its landmark Farm State of Mind initiative to a broader coalition of food and farming sector partners by joining forces with the Farm Family Wellness Alliance to launch the Farm State of Mind Alliance.

Building on the work started as a pilot project in 2020 by Farm Foundation and National 4-H Council, the Farm Family Wellness Alliance expanded in 2023 to support offering Togetherall and Personal Assistance Services products to farm families nationwide.

Coming together under Farm State of Mind, managed by Farm Bureau, will centralize resources and amplify unified messaging, allowing for an even greater impact in rural communities.

“This is a critical time for mental health in rural America. Farmers and ranchers are facing economic uncertainty, the likes of which we haven’t seen in a generation,” said AFBF President Zippy Duvall. “I’ve heard firsthand from Farm Bureau members how our Farm State of Mind resources are changing lives in rural communities. I’m so proud to broaden our coalition and bring even more organizations alongside us to share the message that it’s okay not to be okay.”

Farm Bureau first began focusing on the issue of rural mental health in 2017 through a collaboration with National Farmers Union. The two organizations, along with Farm Foundation and 4-H, will participate in the Farm State of Mind Alliance as Founding Members.

“Family farmers and ranchers face enormous pressures today, and the effects on their mental health can’t be ignored,” said NFU President Rob Larew. “No one should have to carry that weight alone. Through the Farm State of Mind Alliance, NFU is proud to continue our work with partners across agriculture to make mental health care more accessible, break down barriers to support, and strengthen the sense of community that has always defined rural America.”

Existing Farm State of Mind resources will remain available at farmstateofmind.org, including a comprehensive, searchable national resource directory for rural mental health services, as well as the landmark peer-to-peer support program, Togetherall, which served as the cornerstone for the original Alliance managed by Farm Foundation.

“Farm Foundation is honored to be a founding partner of the Farm Family Wellness Alliance, opening the door for rural families facing challenges to access the support they deserve,” said Shari Rogge-Fidler, president and CEO of Farm Foundation. “In this next chapter, as the administration of these critical services moves to the American Farm Bureau Federation, we’re proud to see this work continue in a way that strengthens and centralizes mental health and wellbeing resources for farm families. AFBF’s broad reach and deep network of affiliates will help ensure even more farmers can find care and community when they need it most.”

Farm Foundation first began supporting farmer mental health wellness via a pilot project in Iowa in coordination with 4-H.

“When farm families have access to mental health resources and feel supported, they can focus on providing the food, fuel and fiber that sustain us all. Through partnerships like the Farm State of Mind Alliance, we’re building a culture where caring for the people is just as essential as caring for the land,” said Jill Bramble, president and CEO of National 4-H Council. “As we look to the next generation, we know wellbeing programs and resources will support a healthy workforce.”

Additional groups or organizations interested in supporting the work of the Farm State of Mind Alliance will have several options for getting involved, allowing organizations to join at the level that works best for them. Organizations can support mental health wellness through a financial contribution or by amplifying Farm State of Mind resources and messages as an Alliance marketing partner.

Anhydrous Ammonia: One Small Mistake Can Have Life-Changing Consequences

When handling anhydrous ammonia (NH3), safety precautions aren't simply a checklist to review and mark off your to-do list — they can help prevent a crisis. A recent incident shared by Chase Dewitz serves as a powerful reminder of the potential dangers of working with NH3 and the importance of staying vigilant about safety.

In late October, what began as routine equipment maintenance on the farm turned into a workplace accident that left one of Dewitz's employees severely burned.

The incident unfolded at a fill site with a bulk tank of NH3 that had a faulty O-ring on the metering system and allowed product to leak, recalls Dewitz, who farms near Steele, N.D.

He and the employee discussed getting the O-ring replaced, but other priorities took precedent and that didn't happen. Furthermore, on the day of the accident, the O-ring appeared to be functioning properly.

"I think what happened is the O-ring got wet from product, sweated, swelled, and seemed to kind of fix itself, because there was no leaking. He proceeded to take the chamber apart, loosening bolts, and when he reached a certain point, the O-ring failed and a fair amount of anhydrous blew out on him," Dewitz says.

In a panic, the employee didn't turn to the emergency water soak tank that was located less than 10 feet away and immerse himself in water. Instead, he went to the farm shop, which was more than 150 feet away. Fortunately, Dewitz says one of his other employees, who has some first aid training, was at the shop and able to step up and take charge of the situation.

"They got all his clothes removed and started pouring water over him, irrigating him, but he still had some significant burns," Dewitz says.

Now, several weeks later, the injured employee is recovering in a Minneapolis-based burn facility after undergoing skin graft surgery — a stark reminder that short-sighted decisions can have life-altering consequences.

A Cautionary Reminder For Farmers This Fall

As fall anhydrous ammonia applications get underway, Dewitz says he wanted to share this story to remind farmers and farm employees to stay diligent with safety practices that can keep them safe while handling NH3.

"I think we're going to see people who maybe haven't used anhydrous for quite some time use it this fall, and they may have forgotten how much respect you need to have for this product," he says. "My other concern is if farmers drag an old piece of equipment out of the shed that hasn't been used for a number of years, and it isn't up to the job."

Fred Whitford says anhydrous ammonia training — and retraining — needs to be provided to all workers, whether part-time seasonal workers, newly hired recruits, tenured farming veterans, or even those who work behind customer counters at retail facilities.

"A constant focus on anhydrous ammonia safety helps ensure that everyone fully appreciates their role in protecting themselves, their coworkers, and the community," says Whitford, director of Purdue Pesticide Programs.

"Three-fourths of your staff may have never been around anhydrous," Dewitz adds.

Here are additional takeaways to keep in mind if you plan to use NH3 for 2026 crops:

Never underestimate the need to prep equipment adequately. A malfunctioning O-ring might seem trivial, but as this case demonstrates, overlooking small details can lead to significant consequences.

Always use protective equipment. Protective clothing, masks and gloves are not optional—they're essential. As Dewitz notes, "A lot of protective equipment is available... people just fail to utilize it."

Stay calm if an emergency does occur. That's easier said than done in emotionally charged situations, but panic can amplify risks and accidents.

Take precautions when driving a tank of product to the field. Do not exceed 30 miles per hour, display a slow-moving vehicle emblem visible from the rear, and secure tanks with two independent chains in addition to the hitch pin or clip, advises the Minnesota Department of Agriculture.
