2025 ANNUAL REPORT

THE HUMANE LEAGUE ®

LETTER FROM THE CEO

In the report you're about to read, there's a remarkable photograph that shows an undercover investigator filming thousands of hens trapped inside an industrial egg farm. The image brings to mind one word that, without question, embodies the spirit of our movement: courage.

The courage it takes to face the unimaginable suffering of animals every day is awe-inspiring. That kind of courage fuels everything we do at The Humane League, thanks to you.

When I think about this past year and all the incredible work that you made possible, I'm humbled. I took the helm of this organization at a pivotal moment. We were just about to release the world's largest investigation into egg farms; we were escalating major campaigns against corporate giants like Subway, Best Western, and Ahold Delhaize; and we were fighting off huge threats to hard-won animal protection laws in the US.

And we were doing all of those things expertly and successfully. That kind of efficacy does not happen without the courage and compassion of people like you.

In 2005, when THL was founded, 98% of egg-laying hens in the US were trapped in cages in factory farms. Today, that number has been cut nearly in half. Just this past year, we secured brand new corporate commitments to end cages in supply chains that will spare 1.6 million hens around the world from the cruelty of life in a cage. And through our efforts to hold companies accountable to the commitments they've already made, we've pressured 131 companies to make progress towards their promises to spare more than 160M hens from extreme confinement.

We saw record-breaking engagement from changemakers who got loud for animals when companies that broke promises got quiet. In 2025, nearly 1.5 million messages on behalf of hens were sent to decision-makers!

In 2025, THL was named a "Recommended Charity" by Animal Charity Evaluators for the twelfth year in a row—because we are committed to stewarding your gifts to the animals effectively. We are the only nonprofit to have been awarded this distinction for every year of ACE's charity evaluations.

Together, we're not shying away from the fights we know might be tough to win. It takes courage to play offense rather than defense. If we let the profit-maximizing machine of factory farming dictate the field of play for us, then we might as well concede the game and go home. That's why the relentless passion of people like you matters so much to this movement.

Today, we're not just a minor inconvenience for the global factory farming industry—we're a feared and respected adversary. Thank you for having the courage to challenge the status quo, for refusing to accept cruelty as inevitable, and for believing that the end of factory farming is within our reach.

For the animals,

COURAGE IN EVERY CORNER

COURAGE THROUGH COMMUNITY

The kind of courage needed to dismantle the global egg industry requires one thing above all else: knowing that you're not alone. Uniting diverse changemakers around the world, the Open Wing Alliance (OWA) provides strategic guidance, expert resources, and a global network of support to empower members to end the abuse of billions of chickens worldwide.

Through OWA training and funding, alliance members trailblaze progress and protections for animals on farms in nearly every major market in the world, maximizing our collective impact and laying the groundwork for ending the factory farming industry altogether.

From Thailand to New Zealand, Germany to Ghana, and Taiwan to Mexico, OWA members demand cage-free commitments from the world's largest and most influential companies, and spare millions of animals from suffering. Thanks to you, 2025 was a monumental year for this global powerhouse.

Cultivating our collective power

In 2025, the OWA expanded its work to upskill animal advocates and amplify our movement's impact. Together, they hosted four in-person "Campaign Accelerator" trainings, two major summits, 13 webinars, 19 campaign strategy sessions, and 23 digital action parties. These learning experiences helped build community and solidarity, and offered deep dives into a range of topics, including building a powerful volunteer base, strategically choosing corporate targets, and effectively mapping regional egg markets. Thanks to your support, participants left feeling united and inspired.

Holding the hospitality industry accountable

When Best Western Hotels went silent on their commitment to go cage-free by 2025, OWA members joined forces to get loud for hens. Members from Peru to Poland petitioned, protested, and put relentless pressure on this hospitality giant until the company finally reported meaningful progress toward sparing hens from cages for the first time!

"We don't build power behind closed doors—we bring it to the streets, to boardrooms, and across borders. The OWA is pushing boundaries in countries where organizing can be incredibly challenging."

Carley Betts
Director of the Open Wing Alliance

"Sub-Saharan Africa is a region where we haven't seen factory farming fully develop yet and still have the power to prevent it. That kind of impact is very meaningful."

Alex Suchy
Vice President of Programs, The Humane League

"The training was not only insightful but also highly impactful in equipping us with the knowledge and skills needed to drive change."

COURAGE TO CHALLENGE

GIVING VOICE TO THE VOICELESS

Speaking up for animals is a cornerstone of our work together. United to end large-scale animal cruelty through policy change in the United States, the Animal Policy Alliance (APA) provides legislative campaign strategies, resources, and grants to member groups advocating for policies that benefit farmed animals at the city, state, and federal levels.

Standing our ground for hard-won animal protections

For decades, we've fought together to pass and defend laws protecting animals in factory farms. Sadly, in recent years, battling devastating threats to these laws in the US has become the most important policy fight of our movement.

This year, the Department of Justice filed a lawsuit to dismantle California's Proposition 12, arguably the world's strongest farmed animal protection law. This law spares tens of millions of animals from the worst abuses—including cruel cages for hens, veal crates for baby cows, and gestation crates for mother pigs. Meanwhile, Big Ag also fought to undo Proposition 12 and similar vital animal protections in the courts, state legislatures, and Congress.

These efforts threatened decades of progress, but we stood our ground, thanks to you.

Flanked by APA members, we engaged in months of direct outreach to congressional offices and worked closely with our allies across the movement—pushing back on devastating proposed provisions in the Farm Bill, like the text from the so-called "Ending Agricultural Trade Suppression" (EATS) Act and the "Save Our Bacon" Act.

By the end of the year, 228 members of Congress from both parties had signed letters opposing those provisions, including a letter from House Democrats that was one of the most widely-signed Democratic letters on any issue in recent years. Our strategy was to keep the EATS Act politically divisive, and that's exactly what we did.

This happened because people like you picked up the phone, wrote emails, and contacted legislators. Together, we sent Big Ag an unmistakable message in 2025: We're not turning the clock back on protections for animals.

"Our efforts to defend laws like Prop 12 this past year show that sustained pressure, coalition-building, and grassroots engagement can change the political calculus. Rolling back animal protections is becoming harder, not easier."

Led by high school students and APA Member the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, local advocates in Brookline successfully championed the passing of a foie gras sales ban in their city, sparing ducks and geese from one of the most brutal forms of cruelty.

PROMOTING PLANT-BASED CHOICES

Compassionate Action for Animals and Wholesome Minnesota ushered in a big win for humane food choices in their state. After working collaboratively with Mercy for Animals and THL's policy team, Hennepin County officially adopted a 'plant-based by default' policy for all government meetings and events.

GIVING VOICE TO THE CAUSE

THE COURAGE TO MAKE NOISE

We are all campaigners. This sentiment is nestled at the very heart of our work together at THL. Underscoring that sentiment is our collective courage to get loud on behalf of the animals forced to suffer silently within the confines of a cage. This year, changemakers around the world showed up online, over the phone, and in-person in record-breaking numbers to hold companies accountable to their promises and remind decision-makers that we're not afraid to fight cruelty with compassion.

Subway surrenders. Hens win.

With more than 23,000 locations, Subway is North America's largest restaurant chain. This summer, after calling out Subway in our 2025 Eggspósé report, we turned up the heat on this major industry leader by strategically targeting a franchisee event in Miami. Despite the hot and humid conditions outside, devoted changemakers showed up morning, noon, and night for a three-day onslaught of protests.

From a plane banner calling out Subway as it circled the event hotel and beach, to activists showing up in chicken suits with megaphones as franchise owners left their evening cocktail party, the persistence and passion of our advocacy became impossible to ignore. In fact, one evening protest caused such a stir that players in a pick-up basketball game near the hotel offered their support.

Finally succumbing to the endless pressure this fall, Subway reported that it would fully transition to 100% cage-free eggs in the US by November, ahead of its original deadline. Thanks to you and your fellow changemakers' courage and commitment, nearly 340,000 hens are now spared from cages annually through this major victory.

who collectively invested several billion dollars in making the switch can't easily go back to raising chickens packed together in massive barns that they already spent the money to convert." And in Colorado, executive director of Colorado Egg Producers Bill Scobbi states that bird flu has driven up prices; the cage-free law is "absolutely not" to blame.

Prices aside, when it comes to cage-free fulfillment, food corporations that waited until the last minute are now leaning on bird flu as an excuse. It's important to reiterate here that companies have had a full decade to make progress on their commitments. Many companies that began purchasing cage-free eggs years ago have benefited from the very stable prices possible with cage-free contracts. Compared to contracts for cage-free eggs, which are subject to volatile price fluctuations largely on supply and demand, not on production.

The actions we took against Subway were nothing if not courageous. In Miami, I watched our changemakers rally one another, speak from the heart, and step out of their comfort zones to raise their voices to complete strangers.

One changemaker asked me if I was personally afraid to get out there on the megaphone given our political context. I told him yes, as a brown woman I definitely am. BUT WHAT KEEPS ME GOING IS OUR COMMUNITY and the rage and determination to raise our voice for the animals.

QUIET COURAGE

THE POWER OF INVESTIGATION

Not all courage is loud or visible. Some of the most courageous acts happen silently, behind closed doors, in the form of observation, endurance, and unparalleled composure in the face of animal suffering.

At the heart of the world's largest-ever investigation into industrialized egg farms, was a small collective of determined undercover photographers and the horrific video footage they documented across dozens of countries. Their quiet heroism exposed one undeniable fact: The global egg industry is built on normalized suffering and extreme cruelty.

Thanks to your support, THL partnered with We Animals Media and Reporters for Animals International to collate unreleased footage from these investigators. We leveraged our global reach to drive media coverage of the investigation, and we mobilized supporters to pressure corporate targets that continue to profit from this cruelty.

That pressure led companies like Compass Group to proactively report their progress toward sourcing 100% cage-free eggs; The Cheesecake Factory to report that it was 100% cage-free six years ahead of schedule, sparing nearly 185,000 hens from cages; and Walmart to return to the negotiating table for its cage-free commitment after four years of silence.

"All the hens in cages are horrified. They startle easily and then they throw themselves against the cage walls as they desperately attempt to escape."

INVESTIGATOR IN ESTONIA

"The worst part is knowing this is normal, that this is how the eggs people buy without thinking are produced. No green fields or happy animals. Just misery packed into a disgusting shed."

INVESTIGATOR IN SPAIN

"The older chickens seemed to have lost their curiosity, their hope, and their sanity."

INVESTIGATOR IN JAPAN

DISRUPTING THE INDUSTRY

As a direct result of this sweeping investigation, an established egg farm in Bulgaria, which held 45,000 hens in cages, permanently shut down. Now every egg farm in Bulgaria is subject to mandatory inspections.

I WAS FACED WITH THIS QUESTION: What do I have to do to make people care?

The power of storytelling

Most people don't wake up in the morning thinking about chickens in cages. Yes, I believe that this awful footage can and should speak for itself. But the truth is that most people have seen it before and are good at tuning it out, especially with so many other problems to contend with in the world.

Our challenge became figuring out how to elevate this footage to something new. Not just another video montage of animal abuse. We needed to tell a new story.

Incorporating the investigators' voices gave us that opportunity. Their voices grounded the investigation in real human emotion, and focused attention on critical aspects of the animals' experience that viewers might otherwise miss.

THE POWER OF PERSISTENCE

OUR CHALLENGE TO AHOLD DELHAIZE

If effective campaigning meant only going after the easy wins, everybody would do it. Taking on big corporate targets with the potential to create sea change for animals demands tremendous courage. It's also the only way to combat the cruelty of the factory farming system at scale.

Retail grocery stores buy and sell more eggs than any other sector in the US. They've also been the slowest to support a transition to cage-free egg farming. This year marked a critical pivot to focus our work—and our voice—in a sector where we can create a major domino effect.

Ahold Delhaize USA is the parent company to Food Lion, Stop & Shop, and Giant Food, and the sixth-largest grocery store chain in the US. It's big enough to impact the other major players in its sector, but just small enough to be vulnerable to the pressure to change. This past year, we rang this corporation's doorbell and have since been relentlessly banging down the door with a tenacity that's been impossible to ignore.

Cowbell repurposed

To close out December, we teamed up with the incredible activists at Animal Equality in the bitter northeastern cold and surprised corporate staff who had assumed we were done for the year. Passionate changemakers rang the cowbell they brought that day so loudly it broke!

Showing up in force

For five consecutive weeks in November, THL staff, changemakers, and coalition partners showed up at Ahold Delhaize subsidiary headquarters in Salisbury, NC and Quincy, MA and cranked up the volume for hens.

No sanctuary for executives

From blanketing local communities with posters showcasing CEOs "on the naughty list" at Christmas time to using a fleet of conveniently parked Food Lion trucks to amplify protestor noise, our collective compassion challenged corporate staff at every turn this year.

MAXIMUM IMPACT

THE TIPPING POINT FOR SPARING HENS IN THE US

Twenty years ago, when The Humane League was founded, cage-free eggs were considered a fringe concept. At that time, 98% of hens in the US lived in battery cages. Today, 46.4% of egg-laying hens in the US no longer suffer extreme confinement.

That's right. Since we started this courageous journey together, the number of hens in cages in the US has been reduced by nearly half. You made that a reality.

Sourcing eggs from suppliers who do not confine hens to small, cruel cages is now the industry standard in leading markets. Compassionate people like you have taken us from "impossible" to "inevitable" in just one generation. Companies aren't just talking about change—they're being forced to make it, thanks to you.

While 46.4% isn't 100% and our fight isn't over, a critical threshold has been crossed for ending the unchecked cruelty of the egg industry. The more we hold companies accountable, the faster cages will disappear for good.

THE 46% BREAKTHROUGH

FINDING YOUR VOICE

Going from volunteering with animals to grabbing a megaphone and stepping into the spotlight at a campaign protest takes tremendous courage. Christa has been dedicating her time to animals and the environment for years. But in 2025, she tried something new by attending her first protest. That inaugural protest was one of 17 in-person actions against Ahold Delhaize that Christa participated in last year.

A woman with blonde hair, wearing sunglasses and an orange safety vest over a red shirt, is speaking into a black megaphone. The background shows a sunset or sunrise over a field with trees.

“When I picked up the megaphone to first lead a chant, a sort of magic happened. I heard myself yelling: My voice was loud, clear, confident, and full of conviction. I JUST THOUGHT OF BEING AS LOUD AS I COULD FOR THE ANIMALS THAT CANNOT SPEAK AND THAT ARE NEVER HEARD.”

THL'S COST-EFFECTIVENESS ANALYSIS

NUMBER-CRUNCHING WITH HEART

Spreadsheets and strategic campaign tactics don't exactly tug at your heartstrings the way that a feel-good story about a hen rescued from a factory farm might. But here's what should feel really good: knowing that your compassion fuels one of the most cost-effective and courageous movements helping animals today.

Choosing this kind of impact takes courage. You're investing in work that helps hens by the millions, even when you'll never meet the animals you've helped.

In 2025, we built a clear, conservative equation using data from our work between 2015 and 2025 to illustrate how THL's corporate cage-free campaigns translate into outcomes for animals. The resulting cost-effectiveness spoke for itself.

Factoring in everything from the cost of our campaigns to the support that makes them possible to our organization's role in an inherently collaborative farmed animal protection movement, our math confirmed that relentlessly pursuing corporate campaigns is one of the most efficient ways to spare animals from cages.

EVERY CENT HAS TO COUNT, because every second counts for every animal trapped in a cage.

For every $1 spent on corporate cage-free campaigns, TWO HENS WERE SPARED FROM LIFE IN A CAGE.
